Q: What battery powered locks are available to lock cabinet doors?

A: Battery powered cabinet/drawer locks are available from Codelocks, CompX, Ingersoll Rand, Kaba and Rutherford Controls. There are a lot of variables to consider, such as number of users, remote release, audit trail and door material. For more information, contact your local IDN H. Hoffman Representative to assist you in finding the best solution for your opportunity.

Q: Can a fusible link hold-open arm be installed on a fire rated door?

A: In most applications, the answer is no. The fusible link will only release the door when extreme heat melts the link and does not offer any protection from the transmission of smoke or chemical gases. There are a number of electronic and electromagnetic products on the market that either have built-in sensors or are wired into the building fire alarm system. The best way to insure your opening will pass inspection is to always check with the authority having jurisdiction, typically the local Fire Marshall.

Q: I had a customer come in my shop with a Curtis key blank, and he wanted an original manufacturer blank. What are the easiest steps to cross reference the blanks?

A: Using the Ilco key blank catalog as a reference, first, look up the Curtis number in the back of the book. Let's use C043 as an example. The Ilco number for C043 is 1001K. Second, go to the index in the front of the book and locate 1001K, go to the page indicated and find the blank. Look at the section heading, and you will see that it is a CCL blank. Lastly, go back to the cross reference section under CCL and find 1001K. Look at the adjoining column and you will see that the CCL number is S1-96-5. There are also a number of good computer programs that can be purchased for cross referencing key blanks or visit our website at: www.idnhoffman.com and select "Tools". The 5th bullet is the Ilco Key Blank Catalog.
